Keiseki: a place to slow down in a world that never stops

Artificial Intelligence makes us more productive than ever. But as we become increasingly trapped in a constant state of overdrive, we need a counterbalance: slowing down, stillness, human connection, and a deeper connection with nature.

Keiseki will make its world premiere at Orgatec 2026 in Cologne, Germany.

Inspired by Japanese rock gardens, Extremis created Keiseki, named after the carefully placed stones that bring calm, balance and harmony to these contemplative landscapes.

While many products are designed to demand attention, Keiseki does the opposite. Closed, it settles quietly into its surroundings, becoming part of the landscape, indoors or outdoors. Opened effortlessly with a single finger, it reveals a comfortable lounge chair with an integrated table: a personal retreat for reflection, work, conversation, or simply doing nothing at all.

Keiseki, closed

Keiseki, open

Rotating freely around its axis, Keiseki adapts to the moment, offering shelter from the sun, a different view, or a connection with the people around you.

Open to comfort. Close to disappear.
